Finding unsuspected links between dissimilar individuals, between apparently incompatible opinions, and between the past and the present is one of the first steps on the path to hidden pleasures. It is sometimes salutary to see the world not only in bright and contrasting colours, but also in sepia, with the frontiers blurred by unexpected commonalities.

It's here! Lost In Thought: The Hidden Pleasures of an Intellectual Life is newly published by Princeton University Press. In it I defend intellectual activity--reading, thinking, studying, pondering--as worthwhile for its own sake, and as a key part of human happiness. You can order it at the Press, or Barnes and Noble or find it...

June 9, 2020. Lost in Thought: The Hidden Pleasures of an Intellectual Life (Princeton University Press) was written before the coronavirus pandemic, before the killing of George Floyd. But its author -- Zena Hitz -- argues that reading great books and thinking about the issues they raise is as important as ever and can help in our response to the recent crises.

Author discusses her book on 'the hidden pleasures of an ...

Her name is Zena Hitz and she's the author of Lost in Thought: The Hidden Pleasures of an Intellectual Life. We begin our conversation with how the unique Great Books curriculum at St. John's College works, and how Zena got her undergraduate degree there and then went on to pursue a more traditional academic path, only to discover the downsides of the modern university system and be drawn back to St. John's, where she now teaches.

The idea that learning can be a mode of release from those ambitions, and thus a kind of liberation from the world, seems to have been lost to us. However, in Lost in Thought: The Hidden Pleasures of an Intellectual Life (Princeton UP, 2020), Zena Hitz provides a vision of how learning is a characteristically human activity that is essential for a fulfilled life.

Lost in Thought: The Hidden Pleasures of an Intellectual Life. Zena Hitz is a Tutor in the great books program at St. John's College in Annapolis, Maryland. She has a PhD in ancient philosophy from Princeton University and studies and teaches across the liberal arts. In her book most recent book "Lost in Thought: The Hidden Pleasures of an Intellectual Life," Zena quite artfully explains the ideals of a commitment to intellectual life, and the book inspires fundamental rethinking of our ...

Lost in Thought: The Hidden Pleasures of an Intellectual Life

Readers not already well-disposed to the condescending flapdoodle of philosophy may get their hackles up when reading the very beginning of Zena Hitz' Lost in Thought: The Hidden Pleasures of an Intellectual Life, since her opening autobiographical sketch paints a portrait of an idiosyncratic intellectual upbringing against a backdrop of seeking, which tends to imply some one discreet thing that will eventually be revealed - discovered - to be the object of that seeking, the retroactive ...
